

Teaching Cultures Survey:

Confidentiality statement

The confidentiality of survey findings from each participating university is protected. Participating universities will be named as one of the 20-25 universities taking part in the Teaching Cultures Survey; otherwise no information relating to the findings from any individual institutional survey will be available in the public domain or seen by anyone outside the university. So there will be no university-by-university comparisons and the findings of any individual university cannot be inferred from the amalgamated data.

Following each survey (in 2019, 2022 and 2024), a snap-shot of the survey findings from the amalgamated data set (across all participating institutions) will be included in a summary report¹ which will be made available on the project website. On the website and summary reports, we will list the participating universities, but no information about findings for individual universities will be included.

The bespoke reports and spreadsheets (given to each participating university) will be the only place where the university's own findings will be isolated. These confidential findings will only be seen by the project research/design team, and will be sent only to the university's appointed institutional and administrative leads.

¹ The summary report for the 2019 Teaching Cultures Survey is given here: <https://www.teachingcultures.com/resources/Teaching-Cultures-Survey-2019-findings.pdf>